

Dear Friend:

You're going to find this mail order catalog different from the others you receive...or my name isn't Bathsheba Bottle.

Actually my name isn't Bathsheba Bottle, but that's what people down my way have been calling me ever since I timidly hung out my hand-lettered sign that said "Bathsheba's Bottle Barn". Why they didn't call me "Mrs. Barn" I've never known. But anyway I don't mind a bit having "Bottle" for a given last name. Bottles have always been my first and foremost love.

My father was a glass-blower, one of the best there was according to his peers. I think he would have been particularly thrilled by the collection of colorful glass items I have assembled for my first order-by-mail catalog. I hope you, too, will find much of interest within these pages.

It will please me greatly to fill your order promptly. Once I've sped your package on its way, I'll put your name on my preferred and permanent mailing list so that you'll receive future catalogs just as soon as they come off the press. They'll have many new examples of the glass craftsman's art, and I'm determined you'll find them even more interesting than this, my maiden effort.

Thank you dear friend.

Bathsheba

Presenting Today's Most Exciting Collectors' Items

The hottest development in years in the glass collectors' business has been Wheaton/Nuline's series of Presidential decanters (and its Great American, Astronaut and Campaign Series). They're all limited editions. . .the mold gets broken after a short run. . .and the prices go up as fast as those elevators in the Empire State Building.

Bathsheba has a goodly supply at the current official prices. . . even has a few of the original JFK decanters which are already classified as "rare".

If you want to start building a collection of distinguished decorative decanters, which will look beautiful in your window or on your shelves and which will increase in value with almost breathtaking speed, study the next three pages. Then, if you're interested, take Bathsheba's advice and don't procrastinate. The prices will be going up again come New Year's Day!
